Brief Report:	Change is the ultimate result of any true learning, and learning never wears out the mind. Case Studies just do not help to identify and comprehend multi-faceted scenarios in a single package but also help in broadening the thinking horizon of learners. To sensitize students to the business world today with a much more practicable approach, a workshop on Business Case Studies was led by the Department of Business Administration. The workshop lasted for three days (30 September - 1 October 2021) and was run across a virtual platform in which students learned how to solve and how to form business case studies. Dr Kapil Shrimal from Symbiosis University of Applied Sciences, Indore was the resource person of this workshop. Mr Shrimal took a couple of case studies and taught the students how to solve them. He had taken case studies on profound business entities like Laxmi Namkeen, Bajaj Scooters, Balaji Wafers and more. He also discussed the ways through which one can identify the hiccups that may come in his way and how to then convert them into success case stories for future reference. It was a mind-boggling workshop where students were made familiar with the concepts related to a case study: understanding a case, identifying the problem, delivering, and contemplating it through a case, how to formulate a case study, how to conclude a case and few others. The workshop was harmoniously executed by the faculties of the department.
Outcome:	The focus on using case studies to analyze real-world business scenarios aligns perfectly with the department's objective of sensitizing students to the practicalities of the business world.
	Analyzing businesses like Laxmi Namkeen and Bajaj Scooters likely offered broader perspectives on challenges and successes. Discussing problem-solving strategies and identifying success stories suggests an active learning environment. It was a well-rounded experience by the participants.
