Geotag Photo of Movie Screening

The documentary tells the experience of a 94-year-old naturalist to educate us about how drastically and fast the globe has changed throughout his lifetime. He's shown us how to lower our carbon footprints, how to be more sustainable, and how to remember that "if we look after nature, nature will look after us." It's a wake-up call for individuals, policymakers, and governments around the world, as well as a cautionary tale for climate change doubters. Through this documentary, it was tried to wake-up students, who are the country's future leaders.

The students were shown the magnum opus 'The Great Debaters' by Hollywood actor and director, Denzel Washington. As we all know that audio-visual communication has undeniably played an important and influential role in disseminating information and in cultivating pragmatic thinking. This alternate approach bridges the divide of technology and learning curve, while enabling students to grasp things quickly.
